EP-A 190 630 discloses a foodstuff casing, if appropriate fiber-reinforced, based on regenerated cellulose, on cellulose ethers, or on other hydrophilic polymers, with premoistening so as to be ready-to-fill, using at least 40% by weight of water. In order to protect the casing from infestation by bacteria, mold fungi, or other microorganisms, it has been treated with an antimycotic agent. The agent is preferably an alkyl para-hydroxybenzoate.

US-A 3 864 499 also describes a casing composed of film-forming, hydrophilic polymers, in particular of regenerated cellulose. Dispersed within the polymers there are oilsoluble additives, in particular antioxidants, biocides, dyes, UV absorbers, flavors, or aromas. A cellulose sausage casing is also disclosed and comprises an antimycotic agent approved under foodstuffs legislation. The antimycotic agent is preferably methyl, ethyl, or propyl para-hydroxybenzoate.

DE 196 25 094 discloses a stirred stick composed of a single- or multilayer, biaxially oriented and heat-set, tubular polyamide-based foodstuff casing. Prior to stirring, the casing is sprayed with a solution which comprises an emulsifier, and preferably also comprises a bactericide, which is not characterized in further detail, and a lubricant.
